

NICKI BROWN

Albany Institute of History & Art

Nicki Brown is the Director of Development at the Albany Institute of History & Art. In her role, she manages all aspects of fundraising for the museum including individual giving, special events, and corporate & foundation relations. She is passionate about the arts and loves most the new experiences that come out of museum visits and access to cultural institutions. Previously at the Albany Institute, she served as the Special Events & Membership Manager.

She holds a master's degree in Museum Studies from New York University, where her focus was on community engagement in museums.

Before the Albany Institute, Nicki managed many aspects of outreach as the Associate Director of Historic Albany Foundation, a community development and historic preservation non-profit in Albany. She fell in love with the Capital Region as a long-distance girlfriend, commuting on weekends from New York City to visit her now-husband. She now lives in Niskayuna with her husband and a slight menagerie of pets including two dogs that she loves dearly.
