CSArch

Bill brings more than 20 years of experience in facilities planning, design, and construction. As project manager at CSArch, Bill is responsible for contract management, programming, concept design, design development, construction documents, project coordination, consultant management, bidding, and construction administration.

Bill started working at CSArch in March 2001 as a Project Architect and was as a key architect for more than 10 years working on several significant education and civic projects, including, the district-wide Ballston Spa Central School projects and the Albany Public Library renovation projects. In 2012, Bill left CSArch to become a Capital Program Manager with the State University Construction Fund. In this role for nearly 6 years, he managed and administered ongoing capital improvement programs for SUNY campuses, requiring him to serve as a liaison with campus leadership to identify and develop funding needs and strategies. He returned to CSArch in January 2018 and today serves as a Senior Associate in a Project Management role on our most significant higher education projects. In addition to managing multi-discipline design teams in the planning and development of complex, multi-phased college and K-12 education projects, Bill also holds firm management responsibilities, supporting the planning of staff and firm profitability goals. An emerging firm leader, Bill has demonstrated exceptional leadership and business development capabilities. Bill has also been a key team member with CSArch in our community outreach programs such as CANstruction to support the Food Pantries for the Capital Region, volunteer projects we have constructed with the United Way and the Annual Breast Cancer awareness event.
