

Robyn Polansky Morrison works at the junction of money and meaning—teaching, advocating, investing, and volunteering to make a difference in the world.

Since September 2019, Robyn has been building organizations and structuring a portfolio of “day jobs” dedicated to leveraging her skills and passions developed over 20 years working in investment management and client advisory capacities for large financial institutions as well as experiences gained through a myriad of philanthropic activities.

Her work spans a wide range of impactful initiatives. She identifies meaningful investment opportunities for clients, friends, and family; facilitates capital raising; and advises asset managers and founders through MORR Strategy and Umergence. She empowers women to learn about and align their finances with their values through Jewish Women INVEST, and teaches investment principles to students at Touro College. As the author of The Good Morning Book, she made her debut in children’s literature. Robyn also collaborates with changemakers to create pathways for advancement in finance and beyond.

Since May 2023, much of Robyn’s day-to-day work has been paused as she stepped into a significant new role: working alongside her husband, David, to transform and modernize his family business. This unique and challenging project has expanded her business acumen, sharpened her strategic thinking, and deepened her expertise in change management, people leadership, and execution.
