Dear Leaders,

We, the undersigned organizations representing tens of thousands of businesses of all sectors and sizes across New York, write to respectfully request that you reject S.172-A/A.9571, which proposes a drastic increase in short-term disability benefits. The consequences of such a drastic increase would be detrimental to the entire business community.

The health of New York's economy relies on both small and large businesses. A sudden and substantial increase in short-term disability benefits would impose an extreme financial burden on these businesses at a time of economic uncertainty and rising operational costs. Currently, New York is one of only five states that require employers to provide income replacement for employees who experience off-the-job illnesses or injuries. Historically, short-term disability benefits have been capped at $170 per week. While some adjustment could be warranted, this bill suggests increasing benefits each year from 2028 through 2030, until the maximum benefit reaches 67% of the employee's average weekly wage, capped at 67% of the state average weekly wage for the first 12 weeks of disability leave. Based on the current state average weekly wage, benefits would rise from $170 per week to $ $1,228.53 per week, representing a staggering 600% increase over 4 years.

An increase of this magnitude will undoubtedly cause short-term disability insurance premiums to soar. This is due to both higher benefits amounts and increased utilization. Such an increase, along with the corresponding rise in premiums will severely impact businesses and non-profits, particularly on those operating on tight profit margins. Furthermore, the legislation mandates employers cover at least 60% of the short-term disability premium, while employee contributions are capped. This means the employer's share of responsibility will often exceed the 60% threshold, making New York the outlier in how the program is funded. Short-term disability is intended for non-work-related illnesses and injuries, yet the majority of the financial burden will fall on business owners, even though the program is unrelated to the workplace.

To cope with such a substantial increase, businesses will likely be forced to raise prices, reduce employee hours or jobs, delay investments, and/or cut services. Businesses are already suffering from enormous financial stress due to economic turmoil, rising utility bills, mandated wage increases, unrelenting increases in healthcare and liability insurance premiums, an onslaught of lawsuits, and an exodus of workers from the labor force. At a time when New York legislators are pushing an affordability agenda, an additional insurance increase of this scale, paid for by businesses, will only add to the cost-of-living crisis. Every business, large and small, will feel the impact of this bill.

Businesses are at a breaking point, and New York's struggling post-pandemic economy, coupled with its affordability crisis, can be traced to relentless regulations and demands emanating out of Albany. The state must prioritize collaboration with the business community to improve the economic climate, which starts with supporting genuine affordability initiatives that do not increase costs for Main Street.

For these reasons, we ask you to reject this legislation as drafted and consider alternative funding sources for enhanced short-term disability benefits. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,
